INDUSTRY SNAPS SHOW INTERIOR GLASS INNOVATION

In its fourth year, Glass Magazine's Reader Photo Contest is highlighting exceptional glass in the interior. Editors asked for submissions showcasing innovative interior glass applications, from staircases to glass partitions. The Photo Contest is intended to celebrate what's possible with interior glass and to recognize the complexity and aesthetic value of these industry products, which are part of a still-booming market for interior glass. The array of submissions, and the striking nature of the three finalists, speaks to the wide range of glass solutions for interiors. Architects and designers continue to look to glass to do more on the interior—maximizing daylighting, adding transparency while addressing privacy concerns, presenting custom and complicated designs, and more. The finalists and winners were selected through internal review, as well as a public voting process. Photos were judged on content, composition and their ability to highlight what's possible with interior glass.

WINNER

Jockimo Inc., jockimo.com, custom-fabricated the 75 stair treads and three landings of this eye-catching installation in a corporate headquarters in Silver Spring, Maryland. "The glass is thicker than usual and is custom textured glass that exceeds international slip resistance requirements," says Tim Casey, owner of Jockimo. The general contractor, Shickel, shickel.com, installed the glass.

HONORABLE MENTIONS

Young adult readers can enjoy the new Teen Room at the newly renovated Lions Park Library in Costa Mesa, California, enclosed by custom graphic glass installed by Giroux Glass, girouxglass.com. The room's mosaic walls are 3/8-inch custom graphic, D2G Mosaic, tempered, laminated and low-iron glass, fabricated by Pulp Studio, pulpstudio.com. "This photo very much shows the graphic appeal of glass and what can be accomplished with it design-wise," says Melissa Fischer, instructional designer & LMS administrator, National Glass Association, glass.org. "It isn't difficult to discern the reason why we are looking at this photo: because of the beautiful glass walls."
